Advanced Restoration Process

Margaret's expert team analyzes multiple factors, including fire temperature, chemical exposure, and moisture damage, to determine optimal restoration techniques. Using the nation's broadest spectrum of cleaning technologies, they ensure the best possible outcome for valuable items.

"Every restoration job is unique," notes Margaret's Chief Restoration Specialist. "The specific treatment needed for any single item is influenced by many factors, including the fire temperature, exposure to food, plastic, and chemical odors, and the amount of moisture damage."

Household, Rugs, & Linens

For household treasures that are often not preshrunk or colorfast, Margaret's provides the patience, testing, and experience necessary for safe restoration. Their Household Services division specializes in draperies, furniture, comforters, slipcovers, fine table linens, and fine area rugs of all types. For residents in their delivery areas, Margaret's offers experienced take-down and re-hang service and on-site cleaning to make freshening draperies, furniture, and affixed window treatments convenient during this challenging time.

Smoke & Odor Restoration

Margaret's specializes in restoring smoke and odor in couture garments and fine textiles. Their Restoration Service employs the nation's broadest spectrum of cleaning and remediation technologies, with specialized experts determining the optimal treatment for each unique item.

Window Treatments

Today's window coverings present challenges, from highly complex to exceptionally delicate treatments. Margaret's experienced installers work in the home while artisan craftspeople utilize specialty tooling, equipment, and solutions at their cleaning facility. Their proprietary techniques address challenges like rubber-backed linings, sun-exposed fabrics, and water lines at the hem.

"We understand that these items aren't just possessions—they're treasured pieces of people's lives," said a company spokesperson. "Our mission is to restore not just the items themselves but the comfort and normalcy they bring to homes affected by these devastating fires."

Margaret's the Couture Cleaner provides expert smoke, fire, and water damage services to consumers, institutions, and insurance providers, making the cleaning and restoration more manageable and efficient during this difficult time.
